STATEMENT OF FACTS 4

 A. INITIAL PROCEEDINGS IN THE INITIATIVE CASES 4

 B. INITIAL PROCEEDINGS IN THE REFERENDUM CASES 6

 C. THE EN BANC DECISION IN PADILLA V. LEVER AND SUBSEQUENT EVENTS 8

ARGUMENT 11

 I. COUNTY’S ADMISSION THAT THE INITIATIVE SHOULD BE SUBMITTED TO A VOTE OF THE ELECTORATE HAS RESOLVED THE ONLY FEDERAL ISSUE IN THE INITIATIVE ACTION AND HAS ELIMINATED THE GROUNDS FOR REMOVAL, REQUIRING THAT THE MELENDEZ ACTION BE REMANDED TO STATE COURT 11

 II. THE NINTH CIRCUIT’S EN BANC DECISION IN PADILLA V. LEVER AND CONGRESS’ RECENT RE-AUTHORIZATION OF THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT HAVE CONCLUSIVELY RESOLVED THE ONLY ISSUE IN THE REFERENDUM CASES, REQUIRING COUNTY DEFENDANTS TO SUBMIT THE REFERENDUM TO A VOTE OF THE PEOPLE IN THE UPCOMING JUNE ELECTION 13

 A. THE NINTH CIRCUIT’S EN BANC DECISION IN PADILLA V. LEVER APPLIES TO ALL PRIVATELY INITIATED, FUNDED, AND CIRCULATED PETITIONS — INCLUDING THE REFERENDUM PETITION IN THIS CASE — BECAUSE SUCH PETITIONS ARE NOT “PROVIDED BY” THE STATE 14

 B. IN RE-AUTHORIZING THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT, CONGRESS AFFIRMATIVELY DECLARED THAT PRIVATELY CIRCULATED PETITIONS ARE NOT SUBJECT TO THE ACT’S MINORITY LANGUAGE PROVISIONS 22

 C. THE ATTORNEY GENERAL’S GUIDELINES DO NOT STATE THAT INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, OR RECALL PETITIONS ARE COVERED BY SECTION 203 OF THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT 24

 D. RANGEL PLAINTIFFS’ REQUEST TO CONVENE A THREE-JUDGE PANEL IS NOT SUPPORTED BY ANY STATUTE OR CASE LAW, AND IT WOULD NOT APPLY TO THE REMOVED RSJOC LAWSUIT IN ANY EVENT 26

 E. THE COURT SHOULD ISSUE AN INJUNCTION REQUIRING COUNTY DEFENDANTS TO SUBMIT THE DULY QUALIFIED REFERENDUM MEASURE TO A VOTE OF THE ELECTORATE AT THE JUNE 5, 2007, ELECTION 30

F.R.C.P. 41(a)(1)(ii) 10

INTRODUCTION

In California, the citizens' reserved power of the initiative and referendum is "one of the most precious rights of our democratic process," and it is "the duty of the courts to jealously guard this right of the people." (Associated Home Builders etc. v. City of Livermore, 18 Cal.3d 582, 591 (1976).) Pending before the Court are cross-motions for summary judgment in two sets of consolidated cases arising from the Monterey County Board of Supervisors' refusal to submit to a vote of the people two citizen-sponsored measures — "The Monterey County Quality of Life, Affordable Housing, and Voter Control Initiative" (the "General Plan Initiative" or the "Initiative") and the "Referendum Against Resolution No. 05-305" (the "Referendum") — that were duly certified for the ballot by the County Registrar more than a year ago. This Court had previously upheld the Board of Supervisors' refusal to place the Initiative and Referendum on the ballot based upon Judge Pregerson's panel opinion in Padilla v. Lever, which held that Section 203 of the federal Voting Rights Act ("VRA") required recall petitions in covered jurisdictions in California to be printed and circulated in both Spanish and English.

Much has changed since this Court's earlier rulings, however. Most significantly, on September 19, 2006, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, sitting en banc, emphatically rejected the holding and reasoning of Judge Pregerson's panel opinion, ruling by a 14-to-1 vote that the VRA does not apply to recall petitions that are initiated, circulated, and paid for by private proponents, even when the proponents are required to draft the petitions in a specific form that is mandated and approved by the State. With the withdrawal and reversal of Judge Pregerson's short-lived panel opinion, it is now uncontroverted that every court to consider the issue has concluded that Section 203 of the VRA does not apply to citizen-sponsored recall, initiative, or referendum petitions, and in the more than 30 years that have passed since Section 203 was added to the Voting Rights Act in 1975, no city, county, or state anywhere in the country — with the possible exception of Monterey County in this case — has taken the position that the VRA requires an initiative or

1 referendum petition to be translated into and circulated in any language other than English. Indeed, 2 in re-authorizing the Voting Rights Act for an additional 25 years last Summer, Congress itself 3 expressly confirmed that “petitions that are initiated and distributed by private citizens” are 4 “exclu[ded] . . . from Section 203’s requirements.” Accordingly, any legitimate dispute over the 5 applicability of the Voting Rights Act to the Initiative and Referendum at issue in these cases has 6 now been resolved: The VRA does not require privately initiated, drafted, and circulated petitions 7 to be translated into Spanish and other minority languages.

9 In fact, even the Monterey County Board of Supervisors and the Spanish-speaking plaintiffs 10 in this action no longer take the position that Section 203 of the VRA applies to privately circulated 11 initiative petitions. In a recent development with important implications for the disposition of these 12 cases, on January 16, 2007, the Board of Supervisors — after having insisted for the past year that 13 it would be illegal for the County to submit the General Plan Initiative to a vote of the people — 14 suddenly reversed course and adopted a resolution calling for a countywide election to be held on 15 June 5, 2007, at which the General Plan Initiative is supposed to be submitted to the voters.
16 Immediately thereafter, the Madrigal plaintiffs announced that they were also dropping their Voting 17 Rights Act objection to the Initiative, and they have now formally dismissed their lawsuit seeking 18 to prohibit the County from holding an election on the General Plan Initiative. Not coincidentally, 19 both of these actions occurred only after the Board of Supervisors finally completed its own 20 comprehensive amendment of the County General Plan, which it plans to place on the same June 21 ballot in the form of a competing proposal to the Initiative.

23 Regardless of what motivated these events, the County and the Madrigal plaintiffs have 24 conceded by their recent actions that there is no longer any good-faith basis for them to contest the 25 validity of the General Plan Initiative under the Voting Rights Act. In particular, the Board of 26 Supervisors is no longer “refusing to do any act on the ground that it would be inconsistent with [a 27 federal law providing for equal rights],” and there is thus no basis for federal removal jurisdiction 28

1 over the Melendez action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1443(2). In the absence of any claim of a 2 “colorable conflict” between state law and the VRA, continued removal is improper and the 3 Melendez case must be remanded forthwith to the Monterey County Superior Court for issuance of 4 the appropriate judgment on the Melendez plaintiffs’ state-law causes of action. See City and County
 5 of San Francisco v. Civil Service Commission of the City and County of San Francisco, No. 02-6 03462, 2002 WL 1677711 (N.D. Cal. July 24, 2002).

7 8 Despite their evident acknowledgment that Section 203 of the VRA does not apply to 9 initiative petitions, the County and the same Spanish-speaking plaintiffs who voluntarily dismissed 10 the Madrigal case nevertheless continue to assert that privately initiated, drafted, and circulated 11 referendum petitions are somehow covered by Section 203 and must be translated into Spanish.¹ As 12 is discussed in greater detail below, that argument is no longer at all tenable in light of the Ninth 13 Circuit’s en banc decision in Padilla v. Lever and Congress’ explicit re-affirmation of its intent to 14 exclude privately initiated and distributed petitions from Section 203’s requirements. Indeed, even 15 before the re-authorization of the Voting Rights Act and while Judge Pregerson’s now-overruled 16 panel opinion in Padilla was the controlling law in this Circuit, District Judge Audrey B. Collins had 17 held that referendum petitions — unlike recall and initiative petitions — were not subject to 18 Section 203 of the VRA because they could not under any reasonable meaning of the statutory 19 language be deemed to be “provided” by the State. Chincay v. Vergil, No. 06-1637 (C.D. Cal.
 20 Apr. 11, 2006). There is thus no basis for the County’s continuing refusal to place the Referendum 21 on the ballot for a vote of the people, and this Court should grant the Rancho San Juan Opposition 22 Coalition plaintiffs’ motion for summary judgment and order the Monterey County Board of 23 Supervisors either to repeal Resolution No. 05-305 in its entirety or to submit it to the county’s 24

 27 ¹This is the claim made by the plaintiffs in Rangel v. County of Monterey (Case No. C 06-28 02202 JW). Both of the plaintiffs in the Rangel case — Sabas Rangel and Maria Buell — were also plaintiffs in the now-dismissed Madrigal action. Moreover, their attorney — Joaquin Avila — was also co-counsel for them in the Madrigal case.

2 STATEMENT OF FACTS

3 A. INITIAL PROCEEDINGS IN THE INITIATIVE CASES

4 On January 26, 2006, then-Monterey County Registrar of Voters Tony Anchundo² certified 5 that “The Monterey County Quality of Life, Affordable Housing, and Voter Control Initiative” 6 submitted by Plaintiffs William Melendez et al. (the “Melendez plaintiffs”) contained sufficient 7 signatures to qualify for the June 6, 2006, primary election ballot. On February 28, 2006, however, 8 the Monterey County Board of Supervisors voted not to place the Initiative on the ballot. The 9 Melendez plaintiffs filed suit the next day in Monterey County Superior Court, seeking a writ of 10 mandate and injunction to compel the Board of Supervisors to comply with its ministerial duty under 11 California law either to adopt the qualified Initiative without alteration or to submit it to the voters 12 at the June primary election, as well as a judicial declaration that the Board had violated its duties 13 under the California Constitution and Elections Code by refusing either to adopt the duly certified 14 Initiative or to submit it to a vote of the people. (Melendez v. Board of Supervisors, Case 15 No. M78308.)
 16

17 On March 7, 2006, before the Superior Court could hold a hearing in the matter, County 18 Defendants removed the Melendez case to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1443(2), which permits 19 a defendant to remove a civil action from state to federal court if that action is “[f]or any act under 20 color of authority derived from any law providing for equal rights, or for refusing to do any act on 21 the ground that it would be inconsistent with such law.” In their Notice of Removal, the County 22 alleged that “[o]ne of the primary reasons that Defendants declined to place this measure on the

 25
 26 ²In April 2006, shortly after these cases were filed, Defendant Anchundo resigned from office 27 as the Monterey County Registrar of Voters. Mr. Anchundo subsequently pleaded “no contest” to 28 43 criminal charges, including 25 counts of forgery, 14 counts of misapplication of funds, three counts of embezzlement and falsification of accounts by a public officer, and one count of grand theft. Defendant Anchundo’s position as Registrar of Voters is currently being filled on an interim basis by Acting Registrar of Voters Claudio Valenzuela.

1 ballot was because, based upon a recent decision of the Ninth Circuit in Padilla v. Lever, 429 F.3d 2 910 (2005), the measure apparently violates provisions of Section 203 (42 U.S.C. § 1973aa-1a) [of 3 the] Federal Voting Rights Act of 1965 ('FVRA'), which requires that 'other materials or 4 information relating to the electoral process' be translated into Spanish in Monterey County." Notice 5 of Removal, ¶ 4.

6 Upon its removal to this Court, the Melendez action (Case No. C 06-01730) was related to, 7 and was ultimately consolidated with, another action — Madrigal v. County of Monterey (Case 8 No. C 06-01407) — in which three Spanish-speaking plaintiffs sought an injunction prohibiting the 9 County from placing the General Plan Initiative on the ballot and a declaration that the Initiative was 10 invalid under Section 203 of the VRA because the petitions had been printed and circulated only in 11 English. Recognizing the urgency of the matter due to the imminence of the June primary election, 12 this Court scheduled a hearing on the Melendez and Madrigal plaintiffs' respective motions for 13 preliminary injunctions for March 21, 2006, and ordered that the trial on the merits of the federal 14 issue be consolidated with and advanced to that hearing.

15 On March 23, 2006, this Court issued a Declaratory Judgment and Permanent Injunction 16 declaring the General Plan Initiative invalid under Section 203 of the Voting Rights Act, and 17 permanently enjoining the County Defendants from taking any further action to process, certify, 18 adopt, or place the Initiative on a ballot for County voters. In re County of Monterey Initiative 19 Matter, 427 F.Supp.2d 958, 964-65 (N.D. Cal. 2006). In the accompanying Order Re: Motions for 20 Injunctive Relief and Declaratory Judgments, the Court explained that "the issue of the applicability 21 of the Voting Rights Act to voter-initiated and County processed electoral notices has recently been 22 addressed by the Ninth Circuit" in Padilla v. Lever. 427 F.Supp.2d at 960. Relying upon the 23 rationale of the panel's opinion in the Padilla case, and finding "no meaningful distinction" between 24 the recall and initiative processes for purposes of the applicability of the Voting Rights Act, id. at 25 961, this Court concluded that because of "the extensive County involvement in the initiative 26
 27
 28

process” — most critically, because “such petitions are reviewed by County agencies, which have some authority to require changes to their contents in order to bring them into compliance with state law” — the petitions “satisfied the ‘provided by’ prong of Section 203” and, as a result, “the Initiative involved in this case was presented to the voting public for signature in violation of the Voting Rights Act because it was printed and circulated only in English and not also in Spanish.” Id. at 963-64.³

The Melendez plaintiffs filed an immediate appeal from this Court’s ruling and sought an emergency injunction from the Ninth Circuit, seeking to have the General Plan Initiative appear on the June 2006 ballot. The motions panel denied the emergency motion for injunctive relief and, noting that a petition for rehearing en banc was under consideration by the full Ninth Circuit in the Padilla case, ordered that briefing in the Melendez appeal should be stayed pending the Court of Appeals’ resolution of the en banc petition in Padilla. Order (9th Cir. Apr. 4, 2006.)

B. INITIAL PROCEEDINGS IN THE REFERENDUM CASES

On December 6, 2005, Plaintiffs Rancho San Juan Opposition Coalition et al. (“RSJOC”) timely filed with the Monterey County Registrar of Voters a Referendum Against Resolution No. 05-305, signed by more than 15,000 County voters, protesting the Board of Supervisors’ adoption of a resolution amending certain provisions of the Monterey County General Plan, the Greater Salinas Area Land Use Plan, and the Rancho San Juan Area of Development Concentration Development Guidelines and Principles, which allowed for the development of a new 671-acre golf-residential subdivision in that area. On January 18, 2006, the Registrar certified the sufficiency of the petition to the Board of Supervisors, which ordered that the Referendum measure be placed on the June 6, 2006, primary election ballot, as required by California Elections Code section 9145.

On March 28, 2006, however, with the scheduled election just 70 days away — the Board ³Having entered judgment against the Melendez plaintiffs and in favor of the County in that action, the Court dismissed the Madrigal complaint as moot and dismissed without deciding all claims for relief under California law in the Melendez case as moot. Id. at 965.

1 of Supervisors abruptly withdrew the Referendum measure from the June ballot. Citing to the then-2 applicable panel opinion in Padilla v. Lever and to this Court's just-issued decision in In re County
 3 of Monterey Initiative Matter, the Board expressed its concern that the Referendum petitions — 4 which had been printed and circulated only in English before the panel opinion in Padilla was ever 5 released — might likewise violate the VRA. The Board also noted that a federal lawsuit had been 6 filed the previous day — Rangel v. County of Monterey (Case No. 06-02202 JW) — seeking 7 declaratory and injunctive relief to prohibit the County from submitting the Referendum to the voters 8 because it had been printed and circulated only in English in alleged violation of the VRA.

 10 Plaintiffs RSJOC immediately filed suit in Monterey County Superior Court (Rancho San 11 Juan Opposition Coalition v. Board of Supervisors, Case No. M78760), seeking an order 12 commanding the Board of Supervisors to comply with its ministerial duty under the Elections Code 13 either to repeal Resolution No. 05-305 in its entirety or to submit it to a vote of the people at the next 14 regularly scheduled election. On April 4, 2006, the Monterey County Defendants filed a Notice of 15 Removal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1443(2), asserting once again that “[o]ne of the primary reasons 16 that Defendants declined to place this measure on the ballot was because, based upon a recent 17 decision of the Ninth Circuit in Padilla v. Lever, 429 F3d 910 (2005), the manner in which the 18 Referendum proponents circulated the Referendum petition violates provisions of Section 203 (42 19 U.S.C. § 1973aa-1a) [of the] Federal Voting Rights Act of 1965 (‘FVRA’), which requires that 20 ‘other materials or information relating to the electoral process’ be translated into Spanish in 21 Monterey County.’” RSJOC Notice of Removal, ¶ 4. The removed RSJOC action was ordered 22 related to the Rangel case and assigned to this Court.

23
 24 Given the timing of the Board of Supervisors' action in removing the Referendum from the 25 June 2006 ballot just weeks before the election, it was too late for the RSJOC plaintiffs to obtain any 26 effective judicial relief relating to that election. In July 2006, however, following the Ninth Circuit's 27 granting of the petition for rehearing en banc in Padilla v. Lever and its issuance of an order 28

1 withdrawing the panel opinion, the RSJOC plaintiffs moved for a preliminary injunction to compel 2 the Board of Supervisors to place the Referendum on the November 7, 2006, general election ballot.
 3 On August 15, 2006, this Court denied RSJOC's motion on the ground that "the law of the Circuit 4 with respect to the applicability of the Voting Rights Act to voter initiated ballot measures is 5 currently before the Ninth Circuit for review." Order Denying Plaintiffs' Motion for a Preliminary 6 Injunction and Staying Action, at 1. Concluding that the Ninth Circuit's en banc review of that issue 7 "has unhinged the law upon which this Court would rely to decide the pending Motion for a 8 Preliminary Injunction," id. at 3, the Court denied the motion, "without prejudice to being renewed 9 under changed circumstances." Id. On its own motion, the Court stayed all further proceedings in 10 the case pending the Ninth Circuit's en banc review of Padilla. Id.

12 C. THE EN BANC DECISION IN PADILLA V. LEVER AND SUBSEQUENT EVENTS

13 A number of significant developments have occurred since this Court first considered and 14 issued its initial decisions in the Initiative and Referendum cases. Most important, on September 19, 15 2006, after having previously granted rehearing en banc and having ordered the panel opinion in 16 Padilla v. Lever to be withdrawn (see 446 F.3d 922 (9th Cir. 2006) and 446 F.3d 963 (9th Cir.
 17 2006)), the en banc Ninth Circuit court, by a 14-1 vote, held that Section 203 of the VRA does not 18 apply to recall petitions initiated, circulated, and paid for by private proponents, even when the 19 proponents are required to draft the petitions in a form specified by the State and county: "We 20 conclude, as did the district court, that the recall petitions circulated by the proponents of the recall
 21 were not subject to this provision because they were not 'provided' by Orange County or the State."
 22 Padilla v. Lever, 463 F.3d 1046, 1050 (9th Cir. 2006) (en banc).

24 Although the en banc court's opinion explicitly addressed only the question of the 25 applicability of the VRA to the recall petitions at issue in that case, the court pointedly noted that 26 its conclusion that the county did not "provide" the privately circulated petitions "is directly 27 supported by the decisions of two of our sister circuits" (id., at 1051) — referring to the decisions 28

1 in Montero v. Meyer, 861 F.2d 603, 609-10 (10th Cir. 1988), and Delgado v. Smith, 861 F.2d 1489, 2 1496 (11th Cir. 1988), both of which held that initiative petitions are not subject to the minority-3 language provisions of the VRA. Indeed, as the Ninth Circuit emphasized in Padilla, “No circuit 4 authority to the contrary has been cited to us, and we have found none.” 463 F.3d at 1051-52.

5 Notwithstanding the en banc court’s decision in Padilla, the Monterey County Board of 6 Supervisors continued to take the position that the Initiative and Referendum measures in the present 7 cases were invalid under the VRA, and it refused to submit either measure to a vote of the electorate.
8 The Melendez and RSJOC plaintiffs were therefore forced to press forward with this litigation. In 9 the RSJOC and Rangel Referendum actions, following a case management conference held on 10 October 24, 2006, this Court consolidated the related cases for the purpose of cross-motions for 11 summary judgment on the issue of whether Section 203 of the VRA required the Referendum 12 petitions to have been translated into Spanish, scheduling a hearing on the motions for December 11, 13 2006, and captioning the cases as In re Monterey Referendum. While this was occurring, the 14 Melendez plaintiffs filed a motion in the Court of Appeals to summarily reverse and remand the In 15 re County of Monterey Initiative Matter to this Court in light of the en banc decision in Padilla v.
16 Lever, citing the need for an expedited resolution of the matter so that the General Plan Initiative 17 could be submitted to a vote of the people without further delay.
18

19 On November 20, 2006, just as the parties’ briefing of their cross-motions for summary 20 judgment in the Referendum cases was being completed in this Court, the Ninth Circuit issued an 21 order granting the Melendez plaintiffs’ Motion for Remand, vacating this Court’s March 23, 2006, 22 order and declaratory judgment in In re County of Monterey Initiative Matter, and remanding the 23 appeal to this Court for further consideration in light of the en banc decision in Padilla v. Lever.
24 Order (9th Cir. Nov. 20, 2006). Upon receipt of the Ninth Circuit’s order, County Defendants filed 25 a motion to consolidate the Initiative and Referendum cases so that a single hearing could be held 26 on cross-motions for summary judgment regarding the applicability of the VRA to both measures.
27
28

1 Explaining that “the cases involve nearly identical questions of law,” the County argued that 2 consolidation “would be in the interest of economy of the Court’s and the parties’ time” and “would 3 advance the County’s goal of arriving at a uniform set of rules, adjudicated in the courts, that the 4 County could follow.” County Defendants’ Motion for Consolidation, at 2-4. On December 27, 5 2006, after vacating the December 11th hearing in the Referendum cases in order to consider the 6 County’s motion, the Court ordered the Initiative and Referendum cases to be consolidated for the 7 specific purpose of “cross-motions for summary judgment in light of the Ninth Circuit’s en banc 8 ruling in Padilla v. Lever and on the issue of whether the convening of a three judge court is 9 necessary.” A new hearing date for all motions was specially set for February 27, 2007.

11 As the parties were conferring upon a suitable briefing schedule for the cross-motions for 12 summary judgment in accordance with the Court’s December 27, 2006, order, the next significant 13 events bearing on these cases occurred. On January 16, 2007, in a complete reversal of the position 14 that the County had taken for the past year, and only weeks after asking this Court to delay the 15 summary judgment hearing in the In re Monterey Referendum action so that it could be consolidated 16 with the In re County of Monterey Initiative Matter, the Board of Supervisors suddenly abandoned 17 its contention that submitting the General Plan Initiative to a vote of the electorate would violate the 18 Voting Rights Act. Instead, the Board of Supervisors adopted a resolution calling for a countywide 19 election to be held on June 5, 2007, for the purpose of submitting the General Plan Initiative to the 20 voters of Monterey County. See Resolution No. 07-021, attached as Exh. A to the Declaration of 21 Fredric D. Woocher in Support of Melendez Plaintiffs’ and RSJOC Plaintiffs’ Motion for Summary 22 Judgment (“Woocher Decl.”). At the same time, the Madrigal plaintiffs informed the Melendez 23 plaintiffs that they were voluntarily dismissing their lawsuit challenging the validity of the Initiative 24 under the VRA pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 41(a)(1)(ii). See Stipulation for 25 Voluntary Dismissal in Madrigal v. County of Monterey (granted Feb. 6, 2007).

27 As matters now stand, then, there is no longer any contention — from either the County 28

Defendants in the Melendez action or the plaintiffs in the now-dismissed Madrigal action — that the General Plan Initiative violates the Voting Rights Act and that it cannot lawfully be submitted to a vote of the people because the petitions were printed and circulated only in English. The only outstanding issue in the Initiative cases is therefore what the proper disposition of the Melendez case should be. See Stipulation and Order Regarding Briefing Schedule on Summary Judgment Motions (Feb. 6, 2006), at 2. In the Referendum cases, however, the parties continue to dispute the validity of the Referendum petitions under the Voting Rights Act, and the merits of that issue — as well as the issue of whether a three-judge court must be convened — are addressed in the following sections.

ARGUMENT

I. THE COUNTY'S ADMISSION THAT THE INITIATIVE SHOULD BE SUBMITTED TO A VOTE OF THE ELECTORATE HAS RESOLVED THE ONLY FEDERAL ISSUE IN THE INITIATIVE ACTION AND HAS ELIMINATED THE GROUNDS FOR REMOVAL, REQUIRING THAT THE MELENDEZ ACTION BE REMANDED TO STATE COURT

Apparently recognizing (finally) that they have no legal justification for continuing to deny the residents of Monterey County their constitutional right to vote on the General Plan Initiative, County Defendants have — at least for the moment — agreed to submit the Initiative to the voters. Although County Defendants had for the past year insisted that it would be “illegal” to hold an election on the Initiative because the VRA purportedly required that the petitions be translated into Spanish, the Board of Supervisors suddenly reversed course last month, unanimously voting on January 16, 2007, to hold an election on June 5, 2007, for the purpose of submitting the General Plan Initiative to the voters of Monterey County pursuant to California Elections Code section 9118. See Resolution 07-021, Woocher Decl., Exh. A. Almost simultaneously with the County's action, the plaintiffs in Madrigal v. County of Monterey dropped their objection to holding an election on the Initiative, as well, dismissing their lawsuit challenging the validity of the Initiative petitions under the Voting Rights Act. See Stipulation for Voluntary Dismissal in Madrigal v. County of Monterey (granted Feb. 6, 2007).

Because both the Madrigal plaintiffs and the County have abandoned their claims that the Initiative petitions are invalid under the VRA, this Court no longer has subject matter jurisdiction over the Initiative cases. All that remains of the In re County of Monterey Initiative Matter is the Melendez v. Board of Supervisors lawsuit, which was originally filed in the Monterey County Superior Court and alleges only state-law claims. The Melendez action was removed by County Defendants based solely upon 28 U.S.C. § 1443(2), which permits removal to federal court when a state official is sued for “refusing to do any act on the ground that it would be inconsistent with” a federal law providing for equal rights. See In re County of Monterey Initiative Matter, 427 F. Supp. 2d at 959-60. In addition, the courts require that for section 1443(2) to apply, defendants must “show a ‘colorable conflict’ between state and federal law leading to [their] refusal to follow plaintiff’s interpretation of state law because of a good faith belief that to do so would violate federal law.” City and County of San Francisco v. Civil Service Commission of the City and County of San Francisco, 2002 WL 1677711, at *4.

At the time they removed the Melendez action, County Defendants alleged that 28 U.S.C. § 1443(2) was satisfied in that “[o]ne of the primary reasons that Defendants declined to place this [Initiative] measure on the ballot was because, based upon a recent decision of the Ninth Circuit in Padilla v. Lever, 429 F.3d 910 (2005), the measure apparently violates provisions of Section 203 (43 U.S.C. § 1973aa-1a) [of the] Federal Voting Rights Act of 1965.” See Melendez Notice of Removal, ¶ 4. However, because the Board of Supervisors is no longer refusing to submit the Initiative measure to a vote on the ground that it would be inconsistent with the VRA to do so, the original basis for the Court’s jurisdiction under section 1443(2) does not exist. Cf. Galvez v. Kuhn, 933 F.2d 773, 775 n.4 (9th Cir. 1991) (recognizing that courts must consider challenges to subject matter jurisdiction at any time the jurisdictional defect may appear). As the court in City and County of San Francisco v. Civil Service Commission of the City and County of San Francisco explained in ordering the removed suit in that case to be remanded to state court, removal under section 1443(2) requires that the lawsuit be based upon the defendant’s “refusal to act”: “By its express language, the remand suit must challenge a failure to act or enforce state law (by defendant).” 2002 WL 1677711, at *4. If there is no such refusal or failure to act by the defendant based upon an asserted inconsistency with federal law, the action must be remanded to state court. See, e.g., News-Texan, Inc. v. City of Garland, Texas, 814 F.2d 216, 218 (5th Cir. 1987) (ordering remand of an action removed under section 1443(2) for lack of “colorable conflict” between state and federal law leading to defendants’ refusal to act); Massachusetts Council of Constr. Employers, Inc. v. White, 495 F.Supp. 220, 222 (D.Mass.1980) (“At any rate, the ‘refusal’ clause is unavailable in this case, where the defendants’ actions, rather than their inaction, are being challenged.”).

Accordingly, the Melendez v. Board of Supervisors action must be remanded to the Monterey County Superior Court for the appropriate resolution of plaintiffs’ state-law causes of action and for the final disposition of that case in accordance with California law.

Despite County Defendants’ commendable, albeit much delayed, acknowledgment that the VRA does not apply to privately drafted and circulated initiative petitions, they nevertheless continue to refuse to submit the Referendum measure to a vote of the electorate on the ground that the Referendum petitions should have been translated into Spanish under Section 203 of the VRA. Not only is the County’s position in this regard impossible to square with its own actions with respect to the General Plan Initiative, but its legal argument is, on the merits, entirely at odds with the Ninth Circuit’s en banc decision in Padilla v. Lever, as well as with Congress’ unambiguous description of the intended scope of Section 203 in the House Committee Report accompanying enactment of the Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King Voting Rights Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 2006. These recent authorities make it absolutely clear that Section 203 of the VRA does not apply to any privately initiated, drafted, and circulated petitions, whether the petitions

1 relate to proposed recalls, initiatives or referenda.

2 A. THE NINTH CIRCUIT’S EN BANC DECISION IN PADILLA V. LEVER APPLIES 3 TO ALL PRIVATELY INITIATED, FUNDED, AND CIRCULATED PETITIONS — 4 INCLUDING THE REFERENDUM PETITION IN THIS CASE — BECAUSE SUCH 5 PETITIONS ARE NOT “PROVIDED BY” THE STATE

6 As noted above, by an emphatic 14-to-1 vote (with only Judge Pregerson himself dissenting), 7 the Ninth Circuit en banc court rejected both the specific holding and the reasoning of Judge 8 Pregerson’s panel opinion in Padilla v. Lever, ruling instead that privately initiated and circulated 9 recall petitions are not subject to the multilingual requirements of Section 203 of the VRA: “We 10 conclude, as did the district court, that the recall petitions circulated by the proponents of the recall
 11 were not subject to this provision because they were not “provided” by Orange County or the State.”
 12 463 F.3d at 1050.⁴

13 There can be no serious dispute that the en banc court’s ruling applies not only to recall 14 petitions, but to all “petitions initiated, circulated and paid for by private proponents,” even “when 15 the proponents are required to draft the petitions in a form specified by the State and county.” Id.
 16 at 1048 (framing the “question presented by this appeal”). The primary rationale for the en banc 17 court’s ruling — that it is the private proponents, not the State or County, who “provide” the 18 petitions when they initiate, draft, circulate, and fund them — applies as much, if not more, to 19 referendum and initiative petitions as it does to recall petitions. As the Ninth Circuit explained:

20 “‘It is true that California regulates recall petitions in some detail. The 21 petitions must follow a format provided by the Secretary of State, and must use a 22 minimum type size. The petition must also include a copy of the Notice of Intention, 23 the statement of grounds for recall, and the answer of the targeted officer if the 24 officer submitted one. But these regulations do not mean that the petitions are 25 ⁴Section 203 provides in pertinent part:

26 “Whenever any State or political subdivision subject to the prohibition of 27 subsection (b) of this section provides any registration or voting notices, forms, 28 instructions, assistance, or other materials or information relating to the electoral process, including ballots, it shall provide them in the language of the applicable minority group as well as in the English language” 42 U.S.C. § 1973aa-1a(c) (emphasis added).

1 provided by the State or subdivision. The form is regulated by the State, but the 2 proponents fill out the petition, supply the grounds of recall, and have the petitions 3 printed at their own expense. The fact that, under Cal. Elec. Code § 11041(a), the 4 Secretary of State ‘provides’ the format does not mean that the State ‘provides’ the petitions themselves within the meaning of the Voting Rights Act.” Id. at 1051 (emphasis in original; citations omitted).

5 The en banc court explicitly rejected the plaintiffs’ argument that the State should be 6 considered to “provide” the petitions because the election officials are charged under state law with 7 ascertaining whether “the proposed form and wording of the petition meets the requirements of [the 8 Elections Code].” Id. (emphasis in original). As the Ninth Circuit concluded: “It is not reasonable 9 to hold that this regulatory process transforms petitions privately initiated, drafted, and circulated 10 by the proponents into petitions ‘provided’ by the County for purposes of the Voting Rights Act.
 11 Id. (emphasis added).

12 Judge Reinhardt’s concurring opinion likewise acknowledges that it is the private proponents, 13 not the state or its subdivision, who “provide” a petition when the petition is “funded, drafted, 14 printed, and circulated” by them, even if they must adhere to a specified format in doing so:

16 “The plain meaning of the language of the Voting Rights Act compels me to 17 concur in the result reached by the majority, because neither the State of California 18 nor the County of Orange ‘provided’ the recall petition at issue in this case. Rather, 19 as the majority holds, the petition was funded, drafted, printed, and circulated — i.e., provided — by the private proponents of the recall, although in conformance with the relevant provisions of the California Elections Code.” Id. at 1053 (Reinhardt, J., concurring) (emphasis added).

20 Like recall petitions, referendum and initiative petitions cannot under any reasonable 21 interpretation of the statutory language be considered to have been “provided” by the state. It is thus 22 not surprising that every other court in the country to have addressed this issue — including other 23 district courts in California — has concluded that referendum and initiative petitions are not 24 “provided” by the state, and therefore are not covered by Section 203’s translation requirements.

25 In Chinchay v. Verjil, No. 06-1637 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 11, 2006), for instance, U.S. District
 26 Judge Audrey B. Collins held that referendum petitions drafted and circulated by private citizens 27 were not required to be translated into Spanish or other foreign languages under the VRA because 28

1 they could not be deemed to be “provided” by the state under California’s statutory scheme — a 2 ruling that is especially noteworthy because it was made even before the Ninth Circuit had issued 3 its en banc decision in Padilla, during the time when Judge Pregerson’s original panel opinion was 4 the controlling law of this Circuit.⁵ Judge Collins reasoned that “[t]o expand the application of the 5 state-‘provided’ electoral process to referenda would be to ‘strain[] the meaning of these statutory 6 terms’ beyond what this Court deems to be Congress’s, or the Ninth Circuit’s, intent.” Order 7 Regarding Plaintiffs’ Motion for Preliminary Injunction, Woocher Decl., Exh. B, at 19 (quoting 8 Padilla v. Lever, 429 F.3d 910, 926 (9th Cir. 2005) (Canby, J., dissenting), opinion withdrawn, 446 9 F.3d 963 (9th Cir. 2006)). As Judge Collins concluded upon reviewing California’s statutory 10 provisions governing the preparation, circulation and qualification of referendum petitions, “of the 11 three types of citizen-sponsored petitions reviewed here, the referendum petition process includes 12 the least amount of state involvement,” for “aside from generally regulating the format, the state is 13 not involved in any way with referendum petitions prior to their circulation for signature, in contrast 14 to both recall and initiative petitions. Thus a given referendum petition is neither submitted to, 15 reviewed by nor supplemented in any way by the state until after it has been circulated and all 16 signatures have been collected, instead remaining until that time ‘wholly created and controlled by

19 20 ⁵It is also notable that in the same decision in which Judge Collins held that referendum 21 petitions in California were not covered by Section 203 of the VRA, she also concluded, based upon 22 the reasoning of the panel decision in Padilla, that initiative petitions were subject to Section 203 23 and must be translated into the required minority languages. After the panel opinion in Padilla had 24 been withdrawn by the en banc court, however, Judge Collins reconsidered and reversed this aspect of her ruling with respect to initiatives, explaining that “no other decision by any Court of Appeals has applied Section 203 of the VRA to citizen-sponsored measures such as recall, initiative and referendum petitions.” Order Re: Defendants-in-Intervention’s Motion for Reconsideration and Motion to Dismiss, Woocher Decl., Exh. C, at 27-28 (emphasis in original; citations omitted).

25 Likewise, after the withdrawal of the Padilla panel decision, but before the en banc court had 26 issued its decision, U.S. District Court Judge Ronald Whyte of the Northern District of California
 27 on September 1, 2006, rejected a similar claim that initiative petitions fell within Section 203’s 28 coverage, finding instead that plaintiffs “cannot demonstrate a likelihood of success on the merits of their claim that the initiative was promoted in a way that runs afoul of section 203 of the Voting Rights Act” and “cannot overcome the fact that two other circuits have decided the section 203 issue adversely to their position and are persuasive in their reasoning.” Heredia v. Santa Clara County, No. 06-04718, 2006 WL 2547816, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 1, 2006).

1 private parties.” Id., Woocher Decl., Exh. B, at 18-19 (quoting Padilla v. Lever, 429 F.3d at 923)
 2 (emphasis in original).⁶

3 In addition to the fact that recall petitions are not “provided” by the state, the Padilla en banc
 4 court cited various “practical reasons” in support of its “inevitable interpretation of the statute” (463 5 F.3d at 1052), all of which apply equally, if not more so, to referendum and initiative petitions. For 6 example, the en banc opinion noted that proponents of recall petitions “have an incentive to gather 7 as many signatures as they can, but they are under no legal duty to do so, just as they are under no
 8 duty to launch a recall process at all.” Id. The en banc court thus found that “when the Voting 9 Rights Act creates no duty to present a petition to the plaintiffs in the first place, it is difficult to see 10 why the Act requires the petition to be translated into their language.” Id. This reasoning holds true 11 for all types of petitions, including referendum and initiative petitions such as those at issue here, 12 as the Melendez and RSJOC plaintiffs were similarly under no duty to launch their petition drives 13 or to present their Referendum or Initiative petitions to any particular persons, and they therefore 14 were under no duty to translate those petitions into any particular individuals’ language.

15 Similarly, the en banc court was concerned that a requirement to translate petitions into 16 multiple languages “is far more likely to be used as a sword than a shield,” by parties bringing suit 17 “to stop an election for which sufficient signatures had been collected.” Id. Again, that concern

 20
 21 ⁶The Court will recall that the aspect of the recall petition process that led Judge Pregerson 22 to conclude that recall petitions were “provided” by the State despite the fact that they were initiated, 23 drafted, and circulated by private parties was that the elections officials were required under 24 California’s statutory scheme to review and approve the content of the petitions prior to their 25 circulation. See 463 F.3d at 1061 (Pregerson, J., dissenting) (“California law prohibits any private 26 party from circulating a recall petition until the petition receives state approval. . . . This state 27 approval, together with the extensive state regulation of the form of the petitions is sufficient state 28 involvement to trigger application of the bilingual requirements and to conclude that the state ‘provided’ the Recall Petition within the meaning of the Voting Rights Act.”). Of course, not a single other judge on the Ninth Circuit agreed with Judge Pregerson’s analysis in this regard. But referendum petitions would not even satisfy Judge Pregerson’s criteria, for as Judge Collins noted — and in marked contrast to the process prescribed for recall petitions — election officials never even see a referendum petition until after it has been circulated and every one of the signatures has been affixed to it. Neither the County nor the Rangel plaintiffs can adequately explain how state or county officials could be considered to “provide” a petition that they have never seen and may not even be aware of until after it has been signed by the voters and submitted for certification.

1 applies equally to a translation requirement imposed upon referendum and initiative petitions.
 2 Indeed, County Defendants and the Rangel plaintiffs in this case have done precisely what the en
 3 banc court feared — they have sought to prevent an election on the duly qualified Referendum 4 measure, for which substantially more signatures than necessary were collected, on the ground that 5 the petitions should have been translated into Spanish and made available for signing by even more
 6 people. In fact, unlike the plaintiffs in Padilla, the Rangel plaintiffs do not even allege that anyone 7 mistakenly signed the Referendum petitions in this case because they were not translated into 8 Spanish; rather, they simply want to use the absence of any Spanish translation as a “sword” to stop 9 an election on a petition for which more than sufficient signatures have been gathered.

11 Finally, the en banc court in Padilla found that imposing a translation requirement “is very 12 likely to have a chilling effect on the petition process itself,” for “[t]he expense and trouble of 13 fulfilling the translation requirements are likely to deter proponents who otherwise would launch 14 petitions. When that happens, then application of § 1973aa-1a will have had a perverse effect: it will 15 have prevented, rather than promoted, participation in the electoral process.” Id. at 1053. A 16 translation requirement for referendum and initiative petitions would undoubtedly have an even 17 greater “chilling effect” on the petition process than is the case with recall petitions, because 18 referendum and initiative petitions are typically very lengthy (in contrast to the simple one- or two-19 page recall petition), thereby significantly increasing the “expense and trouble” of translating them 20 into as many as five different languages under the VRA. Indeed, the Monterey County Elections 21 Department recently estimated that the cost of translating a County resolution into Spanish for 22 inclusion in a referendum petition would be approximately $50,000 — a significant, and likely 23 insuperable, burden for most community-funded, grassroots organizations such as the RSJOC 24 plaintiffs in this case. See January 16, 2007, County Counsel Report, Woocher Decl., Exh. D, at 31.
 25 And for referendum petitions, of course, the drafting, translating, printing, and signature-gathering 26 circulation process must all be completed within 30 days, making it all but impossible for proponents 27
 28

1 to satisfy a requirement that petitions be translated into as many as five different foreign languages
2 under the VRA within that short time frame.⁷

3 In sum, all of the reasons cited by the en banc court in Padilla for concluding that 4 Section 203 of the Voting Rights Act does not cover privately initiated, drafted, circulated, and 5 funded recall petitions apply fully to referendum and initiative petitions, as well. Indeed, the court 6 in Padilla made clear that its analysis extended beyond the recall context by expressly citing with 7 approval to the Tenth and Eleventh Circuits' decisions in Montero v. Meyer, 861 F.2d 603 (10th Cir.

10 ⁷Judge Collins highlighted this very concern in her ruling rejecting the extension of Judge 11 Pregerson's panel opinion in Padilla to referendum petitions:

12 “Moreover, the Court finds that the wholesale application of the [panel 13 opinion]'s reasoning in Padilla to referenda is also problematic due to two important 14 differences between referenda and initiatives or recalls — namely, the thirty day time 15 limit and the often lengthy materials that must be included with a referendum 16 petition. In fact, California courts have required that all exhibits to an ordinance 17 must be attached to the referendum petition, a requirement that even Plaintiffs 18 concede could present a logistical problem for translation. And while the Ninth 19 Circuit has stressed the importance of broadly construing the remedial terms of the 20 VRA, an equally crucial point is that such a broad construction need only be 21 undertaken to the extent that it achieves the purpose of maximizing participation in 22 the electoral process. Requiring referenda to comply with the bilingual provisions 23 of the VRA, however, exceeds the purpose of such construction, and may in fact 24 erode such purpose and restrict participation. To require a referendum proponent to 25 translate an entire referendum petition, which in this case amounts to approximately 26 350 pages, into one or even several other languages, and then obtain the requisite 27 number of signatures, all within the thirty day time limit, is a nearly insurmountable 28 task. In addition, the economic costs would be considerable, depending on the number of languages at issue and, more to the point, would be borne by the citizen-proponents, not local governments. The result of imposing such a requirement would effectively nullify the right of citizens in this state to engage in the referendum process, which cannot be what Congress intended in enacting the VRA.” Order Regarding Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction, Woocher Decl., Exh. B, at 19-20.

23 Judge Collins was absolutely correct that translating an entire referendum petition into even 24 one, much less as many as five, foreign languages within the 30-day time limit would be a “nearly 25 insurmountable task,” as the County must now surely admit. In collecting the County resolutions 26 and attachments necessary to prepare a referendum petition against the County's recent adoption of 27 a resolution amending the General Plan, Plaintiff LandWatch Monterey County requested Spanish 28 translations of these County documents from Acting Monterey County Registrar of Voters Claudio Valenzuela, but was told that the translations were unavailable and would not be available until the end of March 2007 — long after the expiration of the 30-day deadline to submit the referendum petitions. See Declaration of Chris Fitz in Support of Melendez Plaintiffs' and Rancho San Juan Opposition Coalition Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment, ¶¶ 4-5.

1 1988), and Delgado v. Smith, 861 F.2d 1489 (11th Cir. 1988), both of which held that privately 2 circulated initiative petitions were not subject to Section 203 of the VRA:

3 “Our conclusion that the County did not ‘provide’ the recall petitions . . . is 4 directly supported by the decisions of two of our sister circuits. The Tenth Circuit 5 held in Montero v. Meyer, 861 F.2d 603, 609-10 (10th Cir. 1988), that initiative 6 petitions were not subject to the requirements of § 1973aa-1(c) because they were not 7 provided by the State. The Eleventh Circuit came to a similar conclusion in Delgado
v. Smith, 861 F.2d 1489, 1496 (11th Cir. 1988). No circuit authority to the contrary 8 has been cited to us, and we have found none.” Padilla v. Lever, 463 F.3d at 1051-9 52.

10 Notwithstanding the clear import of the en banc ruling in Padilla as applying fully to all 11 citizen-sponsored petitions, County Defendants nevertheless continue to deny the citizens of 12 Monterey County their constitutional right to vote on the instant Referendum measure, apparently 13 still clinging to the now-conclusively-rejected contention that the Referendum petitions violate 14 Section 203 of the VRA. In their prior briefs filed in this Court following issuance of the en banc 15 decision in Padilla, County Defendants and the Rangel plaintiffs argued that referendum petitions 16 are significantly different from the recall petitions at issue in the Padilla appeal in that the 17 government supposedly “provides” the resolution or ordinance that is the subject of the referendum 18 and requires that it be “attached” to the petition.⁸ This fact, however, provides no basis for 19 distinguishing referendum petitions from recall petitions. More importantly, it provides no basis for 20 distinguishing the ratio decendi of the en banc ruling in Padilla.

21 By selectively quoting from one passage of the en banc opinion, the County and the Rangel
 22 plaintiffs try to pretend that the court’s decision that recall petitions are not covered by Section 203 23 of the VRA was based solely on its conclusion that election officials did not supply the “actual 24

25 ⁸This newfound position represents a complete flip-flop from their previous assertions that 26 the reasoning of Judge Pregerson’s panel opinion in Padilla should be extended to cover the 27 Referendum petitions at issue here because of all the similarities between the recall and referendum 28 processes. Indeed, at the time County Defendants withdrew the qualified Referendum from the June 6, 2006, ballot, they explicitly stated that they did so based upon the panel’s decision in Padilla
v. Lever, 429 F.3d 910 (9th Cir. 2005), withdrawn, 446 F.3d 963 (9th Cir. 2006), which pertained

wording” of the recall petition and did not determine its contents. But the en banc court only discussed whether election officials dictate the actual wording and contents of a recall petition in the context of rejecting Padilla’s argument that the County should be deemed to “provide” a recall petition because it specifies and approves “the form and wording of the proposed petition.” See Padilla, 429 F.3d at 1051 (“The plaintiffs argue that, because the election officials are charged under state law with ascertaining whether ‘the proposed form and wording of the petition meets the requirements of this chapter[,]’ they are dictating the content of the petitions to the degree that the petitions may be said to be ‘provided’ by the County.”) (citation omitted; emphasis in original).⁹ Nothing in the Padilla en banc decision holds, or even implies, that if elections officials had in fact supplied the actual wording of the recall petition or had determined its contents, the en banc court would have reached the opposite conclusion — the faulty premise upon which County Defendants’ argument relies. Rather, as discussed above, it is clear that the primary rationale for the en banc court’s ruling was that the recall petitions themselves could not be considered to be “provided” by the County because, regardless of whether the County dictated their form and wording, the petitions were “initiated, circulated and paid for by private proponents.” Padilla, 463 F.3d at 1048. That is equally true of referendum petitions.

Moreover, even on its own terms, County Defendants’ and the Rangel Plaintiffs’ argument is silly. A referendum petition, after all, is the means by which private citizens exercise their constitutional right to protest the adoption of a particular resolution or ordinance. See Cal. Const., art. II, sec. 9, subd. (a) (“The referendum is the power of the electors to approve or reject statutes or parts of statutes . . .”). To suggest that the County “provides” the referendum petition merely because the title and text of the law that is being challenged must be attached to the private proponents’ petition turns the entire petition process on its head. The County may well “provide”

⁹This, as noted above (see note 6, supra), was also the primary rationale upon which Judge Pregerson had relied in concluding that the recall petitions could be considered to be “provided” by the state or county.

the ordinance that is the subject of the referendum, but it by no means provides the referendum petition itself, which is what triggers coverage under Section 203.

B. IN RE-AUTHORIZING THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT, CONGRESS AFFIRMATIVELY DECLARED THAT PRIVATELY CIRCULATED PETITIONS ARE NOT SUBJECT TO THE ACT'S MINORITY LANGUAGE PROVISIONS

As the en banc court in Padilla recognized, “the ultimate determination [as to whether petitions must be translated into foreign languages] is what Congress meant by imposing requirements on materials ‘provided’ by the State or its subdivision.” 463 F.3d at 1052. If “[t]he language and structure of the statute” were not sufficient to “compel” what the Padilla court determined was the “inevitable interpretation of the statute” as not applying to citizen-sponsored petitions (id.), Congress itself made its intent unmistakably clear last year in re-authorizing Section 203 of the Voting Rights Act for an additional 25 years. The House Judiciary Committee’s May 22, 2006, Report for the Fannie Lou Hamer, Rosa Parks, and Coretta Scott King Voting Rights Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 2006 expressly states that privately initiated and distributed petitions are “excluded” from the coverage of Section 203:

“[L]anguage assistance that facilitates equal participation in the voting process so language minority citizens are able to cast effective ballots does not require private citizens to make privately prepared and distributed materials available in the covered languages. In recognizing the exclusion of petitions that are initiated and distributed by private citizens from Section 203’s requirements, the Committee restates its position that Section 203 is intended to remedy the ‘denial of the right to vote of such minority group citizens . . . [that is] directly related to the unequal educational opportunities afforded them, resulting in high illiteracy and low voting participation.’ To impose Section 203’s requirements on private citizens whose actions are outside governmentally administered voting systems would have the effect of penalizing private citizens for injuries caused by States. Section 203’s assistance is a remedy for the past and present failures of States and jurisdictions to remedy educational disparities, putting language minority citizens on an equal footing in exercising the right to vote.” H.R. Rep. No. 109-478, at 59, 2006 WL 1403199 (May 22, 2006) (emphasis added; full Report is also available online at <<http://judiciary.house.gov/media/pdfs/109-478.pdf>>).¹⁰

¹⁰The legislative history of the 2006 Re-Authorization of the VRA is fully consistent in this regard with the various House and Senate reports from the earlier legislation pertaining to Section 203, which likewise reflect a clear congressional intent to make the minority language translation requirement only “applicable to states and political subdivisions,” and not to private citizens. See,

1 In expressing its intent to “exclu[de] petitions that are initiated and distributed by private 2 citizens from Section 203’s requirements,” Congress did not in any way limit this exclusion to any 3 particular type of citizen-initiated petition. Rather, it broadly stated that all “privately prepared and 4 distributed” petitions — whether recall, initiative, or referendum petitions — do not need to be made 5 available in the covered languages. Indeed, Congress went even further, explaining that because 6 Section 203 was enacted as “a remedy for the past and present failures of States and jurisdictions 7 to remedy educational disparities,” imposing the translation requirement on private citizens would 8 “have the effect of penalizing them for injuries caused by States.” (Emphasis added.)¹¹

10 In sum, the plain text of the statute, the clear and unequivocal language of the statute’s 11 legislative history, the uniform practice of jurisdictions throughout the country, and every relevant

13 e.g., S. Rep. No. 94-295, at 9, as reprinted in 1975 U.S.C.C.A.N. 774, 775 (emphasis added); id. at 14 48 (“For a period of 10 years, state and local officials are prohibited from providing English-only 15 registration and election materials if (i) more than five percent of citizens of voting age in the 16 jurisdiction are of a single language minority and (ii) the illiteracy rate of the language minority 17 group citizens is higher than the national illiteracy rate for all persons of voting age.” (emphasis 18 added); id. at 30 (“The failure of states and local jurisdictions to provide adequate bilingual 19 registration and election materials and assistance”) (emphasis added); id. at 39 (“states and local 20 jurisdictions have been disturbingly unresponsive to the problems of [language] minorities.”) 21 (emphasis added).

22 ¹¹Perhaps as significant as what Congress has said about its intent in enacting Section 203 23 is what it has not said or done in that regard. In the more than 30 years since Section 203 was 24 enacted, the Department of Justice — despite having brought dozens of cases enforcing the language 25 minority provisions of the VRA — has never once brought an administrative or judicial enforcement 26 action challenging the validity of a recall, initiative, or referendum petition that was circulated only 27 in English. During this same time period, as noted above, two different Courts of Appeals ruled that 28 privately circulated initiative petitions were not covered by the Act. Yet Congress has now reauthorized the VRA three times to extend Section 203’s duration and to modify certain of its provisions, and each time it has left Section 203(c)’s language untouched. Congress’ acquiescence in Montero’s and Delgado’s interpretation of Section 203, as well as in the uniform practice of states and local jurisdictions to permit private citizens to circulate recall, initiative, and referendum petitions only in English, evinces its apparent agreement that privately circulated petitions are not covered by Section 203. See Dougherty County Board of Education v. White, 439 U.S. 32, 38 (1978) (“Had Congress disagreed with [the courts’] broad construction of § 5, it presumably would have clarified its intent when re-enacting the statute in 1970 and 1975.”); Hilton v. South Carolina Pub.
Railways Comm’n, 502 U.S. 197, 202 (1991) (Congress’ failure to correct a prior decision of the court when it had the opportunity to do so should be interpreted as congressional “acceptance of our earlier holding,” particularly “when the legislature, in the public sphere, and citizens, in the private realm, have acted in reliance on a previous decision, for in this instance overruling the decision would dislodge settled rights and expectations or require an extensive legislative response.”).

judicial precedent — including, most significantly, the Ninth Circuit’s recent en banc decision in Padilla v. Lever — establish that privately circulated petitions like the Referendum petition in this case are not subject to Section 203 of the VRA.

C. THE ATTORNEY GENERAL’S GUIDELINES DO NOT STATE THAT INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, OR RECALL PETITIONS ARE COVERED BY SECTION 203 OF THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT

Contrary to arguments that have previously been made by County Defendants and the Rangel plaintiffs, the Attorney General’s guidelines for implementing Section 203 do not support an interpretation of the VRA as applying to referendum petitions. Those guidelines provide, in pertinent part:

“Types of materials. It is the obligation of the jurisdiction to decide what materials must be provided in a minority language. A jurisdiction required to provide minority language materials is only required to publish in the language of the applicable language minority group materials distributed to or provided for the use of the electorate generally. Such materials include, for example, ballots, sample ballots, informational materials, and petitions.” 28 C.F.R. § 55.19(a) (emphasis added).

An identical argument was already made to, and rejected by, the en banc court in Padilla, which explained: “We are not convinced this regulation encompasses recall petitions initiated, drafted and circulated by citizens. Moreover, we have been directed to no instances in which the Department of Justice has attempted to impose translation requirements on recall petitions in the several decades that § 1973aa-1a has been in existence.” 463 F.3d at 1052. Rather, as RSJOC noted in responding to this argument when the Rangel plaintiffs first trotted it out in opposition to their motion for preliminary injunction, the regulation’s reference to “petitions” most likely refers to nomination petitions, the only type of petitions that directly relate to the electoral process (being issued only after an election has been called for) and the only type of petitions that are actually “provided” by the state. See, e.g., Cal. Elec. Code, § 8101 (“All forms required for nomination and election to all congressional, state, county and political party central committee offices shall be

1 furnished only by the county elections official.”) (emphasis added).¹²

2 In any event, as the en banc court held in Padilla, “the ultimate determination is what 3 Congress meant by imposing requirements on materials ‘provided’ by the State or its subdivision.
4 That term simply cannot reasonably be construed to apply to recall petitions initiated, drafted and 5 circulated by private citizens.” Id. (emphasis added); see also id. (finding that the “language and 6 structure of the statute compel our decision” “that § 1973aa-1(a) does not apply to recall petitions 7 in this case.”). As such, interpreting Section 203 as applying to initiative, referendum, and recall 8 petitions “initiated, drafted and circulated by private citizens” — even if that were what the Attorney 9 General in fact intended — would be unreasonable, and such an interpretation must be rejected.
10 Presley v. Etowah County Commission, 502 U.S. 491, 508 (1992) (“Deference does not mean 11 acquiescence. As in other contexts in which we defer to an administrative interpretation of a statute, 12

14 ¹²Plaintiffs have no quarrel with an interpretation of Section 203 that would require county 15 elections officials to provide nomination petitions in minority languages upon a candidate’s request.
16 Nominating petitions differ from initiative, referendum, and recall petitions in several critical 17 respects. Most notably, in contrast to initiative, referendum, and recall petitions — which are drafted 18 and printed entirely by private individuals — nominating petitions (at least in states like California) 19 are actually drafted and printed by the elections officials and are thus “furnished” by the state. See 20 Cal. Elec. Code, § 8101; id., § 10227. Candidates for office pick up the printed nomination petitions 21 directly from the elections official’s office, and the only thing that is added to them are the voters’ 22 signatures. Thus, nominating petitions arguably fulfill the statutory requirement that they be 23 “provided by” the state or political subdivision. That is not the case with initiative and referendum 24 petitions, which are neither prepared by the elections officials nor received from them.

25 Similarly, again in contrast to initiative, referendum, and recall petitions, nominating 26 petitions are directly “related to the electoral process,” the other statutory condition for coverage 27 under Section 203. Indeed, nominating petitions are only provided and circulated after an election 28 has already been scheduled; they do not “trigger” the election. Unlike initiative, referendum, and recall petitions, then, nominating petitions are not merely a pre-cursor or a preliminary step that may ultimately result in an election; they are instead an integral part of the “electoral process” itself.

Finally, it is one thing to say that the government must make nominating petitions available in Spanish to candidates who want to use them, and quite another to disqualify a candidate from the ballot because he gathered all of the necessary signatures on forms printed only in English and did not believe he needed to circulate any Spanish-language nominating petitions in order to qualify for a place on the ballot. In the context of nomination petitions, it would be absurd to disqualify a candidate for not circulating his or her nominating petitions in Spanish, yet that is exactly what County Defendants and the Rangel plaintiffs insist should occur in the present case: Because RSJOC gathered all of the signatures they needed to qualify the Referendum on English-only petitions and did not circulate any petitions in Spanish, they argue, the Referendum should be disqualified from the ballot.

1 we do so only if Congress has not expressed its intent with respect to the question, and then only if 2 the administrative interpretation is reasonable.”); accord, Reno v. Bossier Parish School Board, 520 3 U.S. 471, 483 (1997).

4 For this very reason, the courts of appeals in Montero and Delgado likewise refused to give 5 any weight to the inclusion of the word “petition” in the Attorney General’s guidelines in concluding 6 that Section 203 did not apply to initiative petitions. As the court in Montero recognized, “deference 7 granted to an administrative interpretation cannot result in a construction of a statute beyond its 8 limits.” Montero, 861 F.2d at 609. Therefore, “[b]ecause the Act applies only to voting and 9 registration, [the Attorney General’s guidelines] cannot be construed to apply to other activities.”
 10 Id.; see also Delgado, 861 F.2d at 1494 (“Since we find the interpretation of the state officials more 11 consistent with the language and clear intent of the statutes, the guidelines are not persuasive.”).

13 D. THE RANGEL PLAINTIFFS’ REQUEST TO CONVENE A THREE-JUDGE PANEL
 14 IS NOT SUPPORTED BY ANY STATUTE OR CASE LAW, AND IT WOULD NOT 15 APPLY TO THE REMOVED RSJOC LAWSUIT IN ANY EVENT

16 Finally, this Court should reject the Rangel plaintiffs’ belated request to convene a three-17 judge court to preside over this action. After litigating these cases for more than eight months, the 18 Rangel plaintiffs have suddenly discovered that they supposedly filed their action in the wrong court, 19 and that their federal Voting Rights Act claim should really be heard by a three-judge court. See 20 Rangel Plaintiffs’ Memorandum re: Request for the Convening of a Three Judge Court. The Rangel 21 plaintiffs’ request for this unusual procedure appears to be nothing more than another attempt to 22 further delay a ruling on the merits in this action.

23 On its face, there is no basis for the Rangel plaintiffs’ suggestion that a three-judge court 24 must be convened to decide the issue of Section 203’s applicability to referendum petitions. The 25 Rangel plaintiffs admit that there is no statute (or case, for that matter) that expressly supports their 26 position, but they contend that Section 204 of the VRA, 42 U.S.C. § 1973aa-2, which requires an 27 enforcement action instituted by the Attorney General in the name of the United States to be 28

1 determined by a three-judge court and appealed directly to the Supreme Court, should nevertheless 2 be held to also apply to a civil action filed by a private individual to enforce Section 203. Needless 3 to say, the Rangel plaintiffs can muster no authority supporting such a broad expansion of 4 Section 204; indeed, on its face, the clear and unambiguous language of the statute does not permit 5 such an interpretation:

6 “Whenever the Attorney General has reason to believe that a State or 7 political subdivision (a) has enacted or is seeking to administer any test or device as 8 a prerequisite to voting in violation of the prohibition contained in section 1973aa of 9 this title, or (b) undertakes to deny the right to vote in any election in violation of 10 section 1973aa-1 or 1973aa-1a of this title, he may institute for the United States, or 11 in the name of the United States, an action in a district court of the United States, 12 in accordance with sections 1391 through 1393 of Title 28, for a restraining order, a preliminary or permanent injunction, or such other order as he deems appropriate.
An action under this subsection shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 2284 of Title 28 and any appeal shall be to the Supreme Court.” 42 U.S.C. § 1973aa-2 (emphasis added).

13 The present action, of course, is not an action under section 204 of the VRA instituted by the 14 Attorney General for or in the name of the United States, and Section 204 is thus plainly inapplicable 15 here by its own terms. Indeed, no court anywhere in the country has ever adopted the Rangel 16 plaintiffs’ untenable construction of Section 204. To the contrary, as the Rangel plaintiffs concede, 17 the Solicitor General made a similar argument in an amicus brief filed in support of the petition for 18 certiorari in Montero v. Meyer, in which the Solicitor General argued that the district and appellate 19 courts lacked jurisdiction and that the Court should therefore grant the petition for writ of certiorari, 20 vacate the decision of the court of appeals, and remand the case for the convening of a three-judge 21 court. The United States Supreme Court, however, rejected this argument by denying certiorari.
 22 See Montero v. Meyer, 492 U.S. 921 (1989).

24 Moreover, every court to be confronted with a private party’s challenge to the validity of a 25 recall, initiative, or referendum petition under Section 203 of the VRA — including the Ninth 26 Circuit in Padilla v. Lever, 463 F.3d 1046 and this Court in In re County of Monterey Initiative 27 Matter, 427 F. Supp. 2d 958 (N.D. Cal. 2006) — has proceeded to hear the private action in the 28

1 district court, with the appeal being taken in normal course to the court of appeals, not directly to the 2 Supreme Court. See, e.g., Montero v. Meyer, 861 F.2d 603 (10th Cir. 1988); Delgado v. Smith, 861
 3 F.2d 1489 (11th Cir. 1988); Heredia v. Santa Clara County, No. 06-04718, 2006 WL 2547816
 4 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 1, 2006); Hoyle v. Priest, 59 F. Supp. 2d 827 (W.D. Ark. 1999); Gerena-Valentin
 5 v. Koch, 523 F. Supp. 176 (S.D.N.Y. 1981); Cinchay v. Verjil, No. 06-01637 (C.D. Cal. 2006);
 6 Bonilla v. Barnett, No. 06-375 (E.D. Cal. 2006); and Imperial v. Castruita, No. 05-08940 (C.D. Cal.
 7 2006). In sum, never has a three-judge court been convened to hear such a private action.¹³

8 9 Citing Allen v. State Board of Elections, 393 U.S. 544 (1969) — which did not involve a 10 Section 203 claim — the Rangel plaintiffs nevertheless argue that because three-judge courts 11 consider private actions brought under an entirely different section of the VRA, Section 5, this 12 extraordinary requirement should apply equally to Section 203 actions. But Allen's rationale applies 13 only to Section 5 actions, and it actually undercuts the Rangel plaintiffs' argument here. As the 14 Court in Allen held, "congressional enactments providing for the convening of three-judge courts 15 must be strictly construed," because doing so "places a burden on our federal court system, and may 16 often result in a delay in a matter needing swift initial adjudication." 393 U.S. at 562 (emphasis 17 added). Courts therefore "have been reluctant to extend the range of cases necessitating the 18 convening of three-judge courts." Id. The Supreme Court, however, found that a three-judge court 19 was warranted under Allen's circumstances because actions brought under Section 5 have "the 20 potential for disruption of state election procedures," as they "may result in an injunction enjoining 21 the implementation of state enactments and the suspension of election procedures." Id. at 562-63.

22
 23 In the present action, these considerations counsel against convening a three-judge court, 24

 26 ¹³Although Rangel Plaintiffs are now contending that Section 204 of the VRA, 42 U.S.C.
 27 § 1973aa-2, is the basis for the Court's jurisdiction to hear their challenge under Section 203, 42 28 U.S.C. § 1973aa-1a, that was not the basis for jurisdiction that they cited in their Complaint.
 Rather, they alleged: "This court has original jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 (federal question), 1343(a)(3) and (4) (civil rights), and 2201 and 2202 (declaratory relief). This action arises under 42 U.S.C. §§ 1973aa-1a, 1983, and 1988." Rangel Complaint, ¶8.

1 because the “disruption of state election procedures” that concerned the Court in Allen occurred long 2 ago, when the County Defendants decided (unilaterally) to remove the Referendum measure from 3 the ballot and to cancel the scheduled election upon it. Far from disrupting and suspending state 4 election procedures, then, adjudicating the merits of Section 203’s applicability to privately 5 circulated referendum petitions as swiftly as possible in these consolidated cases will result in 6 reinstating the Referendum measure to the ballot and allowing the suspended state election 7 procedures to proceed.

8 9 In any event, even if there were any merit to the Rangel plaintiffs’ request to convene a three-10 judge court for a private action brought under Section 203 of the VRA, their request would apply 11 only to one of the two lawsuits that have been consolidated for purposes of this hearing — the 12 Rangel complaint seeking an injunction to prevent the Referendum measure from being submitted 13 to Monterey County’s voters. The RSJOC lawsuit, Case No. C 06-02369 JW, was not brought under 14 either Section 203 or Section 204 of the VRA, the jurisdictional provisions that the Rangel plaintiffs 15 contend require a three-judge court to be convened. Rather, as discussed above, the RSJOC lawsuit 16 was initiated in state court, raising only state-law claims, and was removed to this Court by the 17 County Defendants pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1443(2), which provides that state officers can remove 18 an action to federal court if they are sued or prosecuted “for refusing to do any act on the ground that 19 it would be inconsistent with” any law providing for equal rights. It is thus 28 U.S.C. § 1443(2) — 20 not Section 203 or 204 of the VRA — that provides the statutory basis for this Court’s jurisdiction 21 to hear the RSJOC action, and a three-judge court is not required to hear an action removed to 22 federal court under 28 U.S.C. § 1443(2) based upon the invocation of a federal defense implicating 23 the Voting Rights Act. See Cavanagh v. Brock, 577 F.Supp. 176, 180 n.3 (E.D.N.C. 1983).
 24 Accordingly, even if this Court were to accept the Rangel plaintiffs’ request to convene a three-judge 25 court, the Court would have to order the Rangel action and the RSJOC action to be unconsolidated, 26 and would then have to refer only the Rangel action to a three-judge panel, while retaining and 27
 28

1 deciding the RSJOC action itself.

2 Accordingly, RSJOC plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court follow the uniform 3 precedent of the applicable case law — not the rejected suggestion in an 18-year-old amicus brief 4 — and reject the Rangel plaintiffs' belated and meritless request to convene a three-judge court.

5 E. THE COURT SHOULD ISSUE AN INJUNCTION REQUIRING COUNTY
6 DEFENDANTS TO SUBMIT THE DULY QUALIFIED REFERENDUM MEASURE
7 TO A VOTE OF THE ELECTORATE AT THE JUNE 5, 2007, ELECTION

8 Since there are no outstanding state law issues, and the County's only ground for removing 9 the qualified Referendum from the June 2006 ballot was its federal claim that the Referendum 10 petitions violated the Voting Rights Act, upon rejecting that defense, this Court should order that the 11 County resolution challenged in the Referendum petition (Resolution No. 05-305) must either be 12 repealed by the Board of Supervisors or placed on the June 5, 2007, election ballot in accordance 13 with California Elections Code section 9145. Time is now of the essence, as it is imperative that the 14 Referendum be voted upon at the upcoming June 2007 election because the next regularly scheduled 15 election will not take place until 2008.

16 County Defendants' continuing refusal to submit the Referendum measure to a vote of the 17 electorate — despite the fact that the Referendum petitions were certified as sufficient more than a 18 year ago — has denied and, unless this Court intervenes, will continue to deny RSJOC Plaintiffs and 19 the more than 15,000 registered voters of Monterey County who signed the Referendum petitions 20 their First Amendment rights to petition the government for redress of their grievances. This is a 21 right that has been repeatedly characterized by the California Supreme Court and the Courts of 22 Appeal as “one of the most precious rights of our democratic process,” which is to be protected and 23 upheld whenever possible:
24

25 “The initiative and referendum are not rights ‘granted to the people, but . . .
26 power[s] reserved by them. Declaring it ‘the duty of the courts to jealously guard this 27 right of the people’ [citation], the courts have described the initiative and referendum 28 as articulating ‘one of the most precious rights of our democratic process’ [citation].
[I]t has long been our judicial policy to apply a liberal construction to this power wherever it is challenged in order that the right not be improperly annulled. If doubts

1 can reasonably be resolved in favor of the use of this reserve power, courts will 2 preserve it.” Rossi v. Brown, 9 Cal. 4th 688, 695 (1995) (quoting Associated Home

9 Moreover, until the Referendum is submitted to a vote of the people, not only the RSJOC 10 Plaintiffs and County Defendants, but all of Monterey County and its citizens will remain in legal 11 limbo as to the effectiveness of the resolution that is being challenged here. See Elec. Code § 9145 12 (“If the board of supervisors does not entirely repeal the ordinance against which a petition is filed, 13 the board shall submit the ordinance to the voters either at the next regularly scheduled county 14 election occurring not less than 88 days after the date of the order, or at a special election called for 15 that purpose not less than 88 days after the date of the order. The ordinance shall not become 16 effective unless and until a majority of the voters voting on the ordinance vote in favor of it.”
 17 (emphasis added)). Until the Referendum is submitted to a vote, the property owner proposing the 18 development will not know the legal status of his development rights, an issue that is already the 19 source of threatened and existing state court litigation.
 20

21 It is therefore imperative — both in the interests of protecting the constitutional rights of the 22 RSJOC Plaintiffs and the thousands of other supporters of the Referendum and, as a practical matter, 23 in order to bring resolution to this important land use issue for all residents of Monterey County — 24 that the Court issue an injunction ordering the Board of Supervisors either to repeal Resolution 25 No. 05-305 in its entirety or to submit the resolution to a vote of the Monterey County electorate in 26 the upcoming June 5, 2007, election.

1 CONCLUSION

2 For all the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court grant Plaintiffs' 3 Motion for Summary Judgment, remanding the Melendez v. Board of Supervisors action to the 4 Monterey County Superior Court for the appropriate resolution of the state-law causes of action, 5 denying the declaratory and injunctive relief requested by the Rangel plaintiffs, and issuing the 6 declaratory and injunctive relief requested by the RSJOC plaintiffs ordering County Defendants 7 either to repeal Resolution No. 05-305 in its entirety or to place the Referendum on the June 5, 2007, 8 ballot for a vote of the Monterey County electorate.
